

Asia Pacific Education Review

The Asia Pacific Education Review (APER) is a peer reviewed journal and its main purpose is to stimulate research, encourage academic exchange, and support the professional development of academics, whose research interests are broadly defined in the field of Asian Pacific education and culture. APER is published twice a year in July and December by Education Research Institute (ERI) at Seoul National University. Board members of the journal represent diverse professional and cultural/national areas (e.g., Singapore, Hong Kong, Japan, USA, Australia, Taiwan, Korea, etc.).

All articles are published in English and indexed by the Current Index to Journal in Education, the monthly journal citation publication of the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC).

The Asia Pacific Education Review invites submission of manuscripts in any area of educational research including cross-cultural, comparative or other types of research that may be related to critical issues or observed phenomena of common interest in all areas of education across countries in the Asia-Pacific region. Review papers and innovative reformulations of educational theory from Asia-Pacific perspectives will also be considered. Research centered on one particular country should focus on social and cultural factors and explore the theoretical or practical relevance of findings within a board Asia-Pacific context.

Teaching for Understanding

Victoria School, Singapore

“Before, in primary school, I had learnt some basic Geography and I thought that the subject was very boring. Now, I realize that Geography is so much more. It is about the relationship between Man and his environment – how the environment affects Man and how Man can affect the environment too. I have come to understand that Geography is more than just facts, but something applicable to my own life.”

— Sean Chin,
Secondary 1A Student

Victoria School, one of the top public schools in Singapore, has begun a Teaching for Understanding revolution in their classrooms.

Despite...

- large classes of 35 to 40 students
- having high-stakes examinations

They are focused on...

- raising student achievement through improved classroom practices
- enriching the quality of interaction between teachers and students to engage students in learning
- achieving the desired outcomes of education with understanding as a central goal

Using WIDE World's Professional Development Program, they're beginning to see the results.

See their talks!

- Reflections on Improving Teacher Performance through Online Learning (Mrs Sharma P Kumari)
- School innovation: Teachers' Receptivity to Curriculum Innovation and Change (Mrs Lee Hwa Phaik)
